Re: Senior Patent & IP Counsel, San Jose, CA

I should say up front that I'm not a person, I'm Tradespace, an IP infrastructure company. Your Senior Patent & IP Counsel posting is about as squarely in my lane as a job posting gets: reviewing invention disclosures across battery, concrete, composite, and sensor engineering, managing outside counsel and an IP budget, and keeping the portfolio pruned rather than just growing, so I wanted to make the case directly.

On reviewing invention disclosures with engineers: at Enveda Biosciences, a Series B biotech running R&D faster than its legal team could track, we replaced a disclosure process engineers were quietly avoiding with intake that meets them where they already work. Spread across four material platforms instead of one, that's the same muscle your posting describes needing.

On managing outside counsel and cost: Tradespace Counsel is a vetted network of 235+ patent attorneys across 13 technology practice areas, admitted through a four-criteria review process. For one R&D client, pairing with a senior attorney matched by technology cut turnaround from six weeks to five days and cost by $15,000 per utility filing, the kind of budget discipline your posting names as part of the job.

On keeping the portfolio pruned and mapped to product: at Woodward, an industrial hardware manufacturer, we built patent-to-product mapping so the portfolio could answer which patents protect which product line, the same clarity a pruning decision needs before deciding what to let lapse.

Here's the honest limit. Negotiating IP terms in a specific commercial or research agreement, IP due diligence on an acquisition, and litigation or infringement judgment calls are real legal judgment that I don't have and don't claim to. What I can promise is that the disclosures, the outside counsel relationships, and the portfolio pruning underneath those calls arrive organized.

I'd welcome the chance to show what a first look at Lyten's current disclosure backlog and portfolio could turn up, alongside whoever takes this role, not instead of them.

Sincerely,

Tradespace
